Migration: An Irish Reality

It is common to hear people talk about the costs of immigration. Almost one-in-five workers in the Irish economy are 'non-Irish-nationals'

Our economy could not function without the people working in the sectors of hospitality, education, healthcare and technology, who have come here from elsewhere.

Economists describe our economy as "at full employment" and it is still growing. There is clearly an inescapable need for migration.

No one can but doubt that these newcomers have become foundational to the positive operation of our society.

- There is still an opportunity to volunteer for this important ministry in our Pastoral Area
- There are real needs to be responded to in all of our three parishes. It is important that we respond.
- Currently we are kindly being served by Nenagh SVP who have done so for several years.

Weekly Reflection

"I get calls from Bishops from Asia and Africa, and often, during the first three minutes, I hear no words, just sobbing ... They are the ones who rely on World Mission Sunday"

"If you shared these realities and these stories with your people," "I am sure that their hearts would be on fire."

"I know that they too," he said, "would want to help share the Good News with so many people who desperately need it," adding that "greatest news is our Lord, Jesus Christ."
